OUR HIRED MAN.

When Haggerty hired out to us,
Dad figured he'd struck it rich;
Saw: "He's just my plan for a hired man."
He's known an' peart an' sly;
He'd been knockin' around a considerable spell.
An' wuz full er yams to the brim;
An' me an' Joe (my brother, you know),
Wuz tremendously set on him.
He'd tell us fellers the things he'd done,
An' brag of his strength an' skill;
A pitchin' an' hoein' an' choppin' an' mowin'.
An' everythin' else, wuz
We both agreed he wuz drawin' it mild
When he 'towed, in his offhand way,
He could "turn off work like a haythen
Turk."
An' kase it up all day!"
But somehow, when Haggerty went to mow,
You could usually finger he
Wuz either a whettin', or else he wuz settin'.
A-takin' to Joe an' me.
An' whenever he did get started in,
His scthe woudn't work as it should,
So he'd say us fer water, an' reckon he'd erter
Grind the pesky ol' thing till it woud.
So me an' Joe 'd lay to an turn
Till our backs wuz nearly broke,
While Haggerty 'd tell us what husky young fellers
We wuz, as he'd stand an' smoke.
An' he'd tell us how healthy it wuz fer us
A-pluggin' away like this.
An' he'd smile an' say he guessed some day
Our muscies w'd equal his!
An' when he wuz hoein' or pullin' weeds,
Or sawin' up wood fer ma,
'Twas allus the same of confidence game,
Fer he never perceived far
Fore he'd tell us his saw ter home wuz worth
A dozen like this ere shack;
So we'd let it to town while he'd just lie down
An' sleep till we'd hooved it back.
So father made up his mind one day,
After all he heerd an' saw,
That he reckoned the work of a "haythen
Turk"
Wuzn't what he wuz hankerin' for.
An' we boys found out, 'bout the time he left,
That with all his blow an' fust,
He was "turnin' off work," but the tarmal
shirk
Wuz "turnin' it off" on us!

LOVE'S SACRIFICE.

"Muriel, I want you to be my wife. I love you, dearest, and have always loved you. Say that you will make me the happiest man in the world." Muriel Carslake's radiant eyes lit up with sudden enthusiasm. "Yes, Dick, I will." "My own darling girl!" he cried. "It seems so strange, dear, that a saint like you should care for a stupid, humdrum fellow like me." Muriel, who was by no means callous at heart, began to feel various qualms of remorse. It was very wrong to deceive poor Dick, she reflected, and to allow him to fancy that she loved him, when all the affection of her heart and soul had long since been given up to his friend, Jack Castleton, but, after all, what could she do? Jack was simply a humble clerk, earning a clerk's wage, whereas Dick Armstrong's income ran into five figures yearly, and every one of those figures meant much to Muriel Carslake. An orphan, brought up in the home of a relative, where poverty reigned supreme, she had come to loathe the mere thought of straitened means with deadly aversion. She tripped home and told her aunt of the episode, and received that lady's congratulations with much composure. "You are a dear, sensible girl, Muriel," remarked Mrs. Vinnicombe, kissing her niece warmly, "and you deserve to be happy. I am glad you have put all that nonsense about young Castleton out of your head." Then Muriel went slowly to her room and wrote the following letter: "My Poor Dear Jack:—I have some news for you which I hope you won't take to heart more than you can help. This afternoon your friend, Mr. Armstrong, asked me to be his wife, and, like the wicked, mercenary girl that I am, I said 'yes' to him. You see, Jack, he is very rich, and the mere thought of a life of poverty is so horrid to me that I think it better to marry without love than without money. I know it is very hard on you, dear, but you must try and forgive me, and forget me as soon as you can. You and I have had some sweet times together, but of course we must put all those memories out of our heads now and blot out the golden hours for ever and ever. It is hard, I know, but life is always hard, especially when love comes into it. Ah, why didn't your uncle buy you that partnership in the bank which we used to fancy he would do? If he had done that, how different everything would have been! Then you and I could have married months ago, and this sordid business would never have been entered into by me. If only you knew how I hate myself for what I have done and for the way in which I have deceived poor Dick, you would, I think, pity me with all your heart. As it is, I cannot ask for your pity, but only for your forgiveness. Good-by and God bless you. Your faithless but still loving Muriel."

And when the letter had been placed in its envelope, stamped and dispatched, the writer of it flung herself upon her couch and sobbed her very soul from her eyes.

"Great Scott, Armstrong, you're wet through. There, sit down by the fire, man, and take off your coat. You shall have one of mine to wear for the time being."

"Thanks, Castleton, you're awfully good. I meant to drive over to your lodgings, but couldn't find a conveyance, and so I walked. Do you know, I hardly felt the rain at all, for I was burning to tell you some wonderful news."

"Well, slip on this jacket and make yourself comfortable, first of all."

Dick Armstrong obeyed good humoredly, and assumed the lounge coat which his chum extended to him. Then, seating himself by the fire, he stretched his legs toward the blaze and said, slowly:

"Old chap, I am engaged to be married."

Jack Castleton winced as the words fell upon his ears. The news of the engagement had already been conveyed to him by Muriel's letter, but naturally he gave no sign of knowledge, but merely bowed his head and said:

"Indeed. You have my congratulations."

"Thank you very much, old chap. The lady who is to be my wife is some one whom I think you know—Miss Carslake."

"Yes, I know her very well, indeed."

"Then you know the sweetest and best woman on earth. I don't deserve her, Jack, I don't, indeed. Such a girl as Muriel might marry an earl, a duke, a prince, and yet confer distinction rather than receive it. When we are married, Jack, you must come and see us very often. You'll come, won't you, old chap?"

"I—I—yes, that is, of course I'll come."

His lips quivered as he spoke, and, to tell the truth, Jack Castleton was undergoing an agonizing ordeal. His nature was honest itself, and it agitated him beyond measure to be compelled to play a part and to allow his best friend to go in ignorance of the genuine condition of affairs.

Dick continued to talk in happy tones, speaking with all the joyousness of a lover regarding the woman he loved. When at length the clock pointed to six he rose to take his leave.

"Good-by, old chap," he said, heartily. "I suppose my wearing this jacket of yours won't inconvenience you?"

"Not at all. It's simply an old lounge coat that I ought to have thrown away long ago."

The young men parted at the door of Castleton's lodgings, and Dick slowly tramped away in the direction of the comfortable apartments which he occupied at the Red Lion. Arrived at the inn he went straight to his room, and, sitting down in a deep chair, put his hand to his pocket mechanically in order to extract his cigar case. In the excitement of his present mood he had completely forgotten that he was wearing another man's coat, and, lo! instead of the cigar case his fingers closed upon a letter. Hedrew it forth, and before he could realize that the communication was not one of his own his amazed eyes had fallen upon a handwriting which he knew and loved—the handwriting of Muriel Carslake. Merciful heavens! It began with the words: "My poor, dear Jack."

Dick Armstrong was an honorable man, but for the life of him he could not refrain from reading every word which the letter, found by accident in his friend's coat, contained. When he had finished the perusal he read it again, and then again, the truth slowly sinking into his agonized heart as the words penetrated his brain.

Presently he rose and paced the room, trying to think out the situation. So Muriel did not care for him after all; her heart belonged to another, and she had promised to marry him merely because she dreaded a life of poverty. Her love was centered on his banking account—not on himself. It was a bitter awakening, indeed, and he groaned in the tortures of the terrible disillusionment.

He felt no resentment—no shadow of resentment—against the girl. After all, she had never sought him out; she had accepted his addresses with respect rather than with passionate ardor, and she had on no single occasion made protestations of anything more than gentle affection.

He read Muriel's letter once again, and this time his eyes lighted on the paragraph which ran thus: "Ah, why didn't your uncle buy you that partnership in the bank which we used to fancy he would do."

If he had done that, how different everything would have been!"

Dick knew quite well to what partnership the girl thus referred. For a long time Felix Densmore, the presiding director of the local bank, had been anxious to secure a young and energetic partner who would bring into the business a capital of $25,000, but, so far, no candidate had offered himself for the enviable position.

"I'll do it," he murmured; "I'll do it; yes, I'll do it."

On the following morning Dick Armstrong went to London and drove to the office of his solicitor in Clifford's place. After a short delay he was ushered into Mr. Jennifer's office, the latter rising to greet him as he entered.

"I am leaving England almost directly," said Dick, quietly; "and before I go I want you to effect a certain undertaking for me. I want you to negotiate the purchase of the junior partnership in the Densmore bank at Bayfield, and to confer it upon a friend of mine. But understand this. He is not to know that—that—"

"That you are his benefactor, eh?" interpolated the lawyer, with a sagacious smile.

"Put it that way if you will."

"I understand perfectly. Now be good enough to give me the full details regarding this transaction, and it shall be carried out forthwith."

Dick obeyed, and half an hour later the affair had been settled.

Two nights later Muriel Carslake received a letter in Dick's handwriting. It ran thus:

"My Own Dear Sweetheart—I am quitting England for a long time, and I do not know when I shall return. I have learned your secret and know that your heart belongs to another. I therefore give you back your freedom, and hope that you may be very happy with him you love. Do not think that I blame you for one instant. I love you too much to feel any bitterness against you, and although at first the blow was a heavy one, I hope that time may do much to soften my pain and bring forgetfulness. There are better things in this world, Muriel, than getting one's own way, and if I have learned nothing else in my journey through life, I have learned that. God knows best. He decides all things for good. Think of me sometimes when I am far away. Think of me as one who, had he been privileged to become your husband, would have devoted his existence to making you happy, but who, as it is, can only remain your sincere and devoted friend."

"Dick Armstrong."

"P. S.—I have kept the lock of hair you gave me. Do you mind?"

That was all. The letter was short, simple, and concise; but in the writing of it a human heart had touched breaking point, and tears had watered every halting line.

Three months have sped into the past since Muriel read Dick Armstrong's farewell letter. In a certain room in a hotel in Melbourne a man sits with a home newspaper before him, glancing listlessly at its columns. Suddenly an exclamation escapes his lips, and he reads these words:

Castleton-Carslake.—On the 27th ult., at St. John's, Bayfield Lines, John Castleton, junior partner in Messrs. Densmore & Co.'s bank, to Muriel, only daughter of the late Francis Carslake, Esq., of that town.

He read the announcement again and again, till the words seemed to float before his eyes. All has happened as he hoped it would happen. Jack has secured the partnership and Muriel has secured her love. All is well—except—except what?—London Tit-Bits.

Test Between Two Gentlemen as to Training of Their Servants.

Two gentlemen were one day boasting which of them had the best-trained servant. First gentleman called his servant, and asked him to go to a shop near at hand and bring him half a pound of tobacco.

The gentleman taking out his watch began:

"He is on the street. He is round the corner. He is into the shop. He is asking for my tobacco. He's got it. He is in the street again. He is round the corner. He is coming up the street. He is at the door. Come in."

The servant enters and hands the tobacco to his master.

Second gentleman called his servant and gave him the same order, took out his watch and began:

"He is on the street. He is round the corner. He is into the shop. They are asking as to my health. He has got the tobacco. He has given them a sovereign. He has got back the change. He is out in the street. He is round the corner. He is coming up the street. He's here. Come in."

WORD FOR WORD.

The Reporters Complied to the Letter with the Wishes of the Speaker.

It is not a new plaint among legislators and other loquacious bodies that the shorthand report is not all that it should be, but if the reporter's side is less frequently presented it is not because there is nothing to be said. A member of a committee World said, with the way their speeches were reported; his own, in particular, were scarcely recognizable when seen in print. He did not want his speeches "cut," neither did he want them "embroidered." He wanted them to come out in the paper exactly as he made them. So did the member who spoke next, whereupon the shorthand writers retaliated, with this telling result:

Sarah Had a Nasal Twang, But She Was Going to Receive One Good Hand.

That the theatrical claque is not confined to playhouses was demonstrated beyond all shadow of doubt to the teacher who was drilling the pupils for the exercises in one of the public schools, relates the New York Times.

The unresponsive bit of femininity over whom the amateur "coach" worked so hard, was the name of Sarah. When Sarah began to talk all her vocal organs took joyful holiday and retired in favor of her nose. In vain the teacher begged an impromptu. Sarah still clung to her monotone. Then the teacher threatened.

"Sarah," she said, "if you don't try to do better you will fail utterly and then how will you feel?" "Oh, they'll applaud me, Miss Brown," returned Sarah, easily. "My mother's going to give my little brother Andy ten cents, and if he don't begin clapping the minute I sit down he's going to be trampled within an inch of his life."

"What are you selling, uncle?" inquired a Washington Star reporter.

"Hoot-ta-loots, honey," replied the old man.

"What's a hoot-ta-loot?"

"Well, dey's somethin' like pie, only dey isn't."

"Where did you get the name?"

"Well, it 'riginated during Camp Alger, over in Virginny. I used to sell pies to de soldiers over dah, but one day an order cum stoppin' all de people from sellin' 'em. So when I went home one day wid my basket full of 'em, I found 'em empty. ## MADE HIM UNDERSTAND.

Employs Who Knew Too Much Grammar to Hold His Position

"Absent yesterday," said the aged manager, as he adjusted his glasses, to the smart young man, relates the London Tit-Bits.

"Yes, sir," replied the clerk.

"Absent from illness?"

"No, sir."

"Oh, you're honest, at any rate. Most men would say they were."

"I haven't been absent from illness for nearly a year."

"You haven't?" The old man looked surprised.

"No, sir. It has been with me all the time."

"What has?"

"Illness of some sort."

"But you said that yesterday—"

"Yesterday I was absent on account of illness, sir."

The old man thought the matter over a minute or two and then he said:

"Yes, yes; I see. You're rather particular in the use of words."

"Yes, sir. Study to use them correctly."

"Of course; and I'm a trifle careless. Now, please see if this sentence is correct: 'Hereafter you will be absent from my displeasure.'"

"Ye-es, sir."

"You will also be absent on account of my displeasure."

"Ye-es, sir."

"And because of my displeasure."

"Ye-es, sir."

"Quite right. I'm glad that I have sufficient command of language to make you understand me. The cashier will pay you your wages. Good day."

Darkness of Ocean Depths.

"How far does sunlight penetrate beneath the surface of the seas?" has been asked many times, and now the camera has answered the question. By exposing the most sensitive photographic plates at various depths it has been ascertained with definiteness how much sunlight there is in water with each descending foot. There is a point at which no action of light is found, and that point is 600 feet under the surface. Below that is absolute darkness.

JAVANESE WOO SLUMBER.

By Shutting Off the Brain's Blood Supply—The Sleep Artery.

Mr. L. Steiner, says the Semaine Medicale (Paris), observed among the inmates of the hospital of Surabaya, Java, a healer who treated the patients by placing them in a profound anesthetic sleep, obtained by means of the compression of the carotid arteries. To accomplish this the operator, seated on the ground behind the patient, seized the nape of the neck of the latter between the two hands, then he pushed forward the index and the middle fingers on each side until they were in the neighborhood of the lower jaw-bone, where he thrust his two fingers in order to find a "vessel animated with pulsations," which he then compressed on the vertebral column. Under the influence of these maneuvers the patient became uneasy, at the same time his respiration quickened and became deeper, then the head fell behind, at which time the operator ceased to press the neck. After the patient had remained for several moments in the same motionless attitude as though he were asleep, he opened his eyes with an astonished expression, as if he were suddenly awakened.

Mr. Steiner soon learned that this practice is very extensive in the east of Java, as well as in the islands of Madura and of Banka, there being usually added a general massage, which is very much in vogue among the natives. The treatment is known under the name of Tarik urat tidor, that is, "compression of the soporific vessels," and it is interesting to note in passing that the carotid artery designated by several ancient anatomists as the Arteria Soporifera, possesses the name at present in Russia of Sonnai Arteria (artery of sleep). According to the natives of the Malay archipelago, the practice in question exercises a favorable action on fatigue, headache, insomnia, etc.

These facts have appeared worthy of close study and the author instituted a series of experiments on 30 Javanese, of which two were women. He first applied the procedure as it had been taught to him by the healer of Surabaya, but afterward he modified the method so that he could better observe the subject of the experiment. With this end in view, he seated himself before the patient and seized the neck of the latter by placing the right hand on the left side of the neck and the left hand on the right side, the ends of the fingers reaching the nape of the neck. Mr. Steiner then pressed the two thumbs behind and a little under the angles of the lower maxillary, the pulsation of the carotid artery being clearly discernible. The thumb was applied the length of the vessel by exercising a moderate pressure toward the vertebral column. Among 30 subjects submitted to the experiment, five only were failures; with all the others there took place rapidly, amid convulsions more or less pronounced, a complete loss of sensibility and consciousness to such a degree that with one of the subjects the author was able to lance an inguinal abscess without knowledge on the part of the patient. Mr. Steiner never observed during or after these experiments the least accident.

TOO INQUISITIVE.

Chinese Woman Wanted to See Interiors of an Internal Machine.

Some weeks ago a foreign sentinel stationed near the south gate in Tientsin, China, heard a loud explosion and on entering the house whence the noise proceeded found an old Chinese woman, terribly scorched and shattered, lying on the ground. It seems that the woman's son had been employed three years ago in the Chinese arsenal and that when the city was taken by these allies he had arranged a number of explosives in a box in such a way that the opening of the box would set them off. He warned his mother and wife not to touch the box, and if any foreigners came in they were to run away. A year ago the son went away and died shortly afterward. The mother left the box alone up to the night when the explosion occurred, when, curiosity getting the better of her, she took advantage of her daughter-in-law's temporary absence to open it. A horrible death was the result.—Chicago Daily News.

Married Schoolboys.

There are 1,100 Chinese pupils in Queen's college, Hong-Kong, varying in age from nine to twenty-three, and many of them have family cares in the shape of a wife and children at home. Each year sees a decrease in the proportion of married schoolboys, and the average age becomes greater every year.

LESSON IN AMERICAN HISTORY IN PUZZLE

THE DESTRUCTION OF THE PEQUODS. Find Capt. Mason and Capt. Underhill.

Being unable to secure assistance from either the Narragansett or the Mohican Indians the Pequods determined to make war upon the white settlements of Connecticut alone. The settlers appealed to Plymouth and Massachusetts for aid. The appeal was answered by sending a force of 100 soldiers under Capt. Mason to assist the Connecticut settlers, and these were joined by the Connecticut troops under Capt. Underhill. The combined force attacked the Indians in a palisaded inclosure on the banks of the Mystic river, and after desperate fighting killed virtually every man, woman and child of the Pequod tribe. In the one great battle on May 25, 1637, more than 1,000 of the Pequods were killed, no quarter being given.

TALL MAN AND SHORT MAN.

Object to Walking Together But Do It Just the Same.

"Walking with a short-legged man is one of the most tiresome things in the world," said the man with lengthy limbs, according to the New Orleans Times-Democrat, "and somehow it is always my lot to fall in with a man of this build when I have any considerable distance to walk. Why this is so I do not know, but it is so nevertheless. Other men, built as I am, have told me the same story, and have declared that walking under such circumstances is the most laborious work imaginable. I have had some military training and this thing of keeping step is natural to me. I simply have to keep step, no matter who I am with or under what circumstance. Imagine a fellow with legs like mine keeping step with a man whose head scarcely gets to the pit of the arms! Yet I do it. Under ordinary conditions one of my strides would make six for the man of the size indicated, so I am forced to cut one step up into six parts. Can you imagine anything more tiresome, more physically exhausting? If there is anything worse in this respect I have failed to find it and yet this is exactly the thing I am constantly forced to endure." Said the man with short legs: "Did you ever walk around with one of these fellows who parade around on stilts with which nature has provided them? Tiresome? Well, I should say so. Most tiresome thing in the world. One likes to keep step, you know, and yet a man of my build is forced to do a hop, skip and jump turn in order to keep up. These long legged fellows simply run me to death, and somehow it always falls to me to be thrown with a man with legs like telegraph poles." And a few moments later the long man and the short man were walking down the street "side by side" as the Dutchman would say.

SNAKES HARD TO STARVE.

Live Incredible Length of Time with Nothing to Eat.

"The man who tries to starve a snake to death is in a bad way," said the man who has had some experience in dealing with reptiles, to a New Orleans Times-Democrat reporter, "and I happen to know what I am talking about because of a little thing that happened to me a number of years ago. There is really no telling how long a snake can go without food. It is estimated that a horse can live 25 days without solid food. A horse will live on water for that length of time. Bears can live for six months without food. They generally live through the winter months by sucking their paw. Of course, they have some food on hand, and they slip out to get what they can, but the main sustenance of the bear is the accumulated flesh of the summer. But I am inclined to believe that the snake can hold the record when it comes to doing without food. I had an experience a few years ago which convinced me of this fact. I caught a rattlesnake in my hen house in the southeastern part of Arkansas, and happened to catch him so that he could not get out. There was a good-sized rat hole in the place, and he darted into this as a last resort. I stopped the hole so the snake could not get out and for the purpose of starving the reptile to death. I never thought any more about the snake until more than 18 months after that, when I had occasion to make some repairs about the place. It was necessary to do some excavating. I was simply startled to find, a short distance below the surface, the snake which I had sought to starve to death. He was a little lank and was not very active, but he was still alive. I felt very sorry for the reptilian, and would not kill him, allowing him to crawl away. Since that time I have been convinced that a snake could do without food for a considerable length of time, and the claim that they can go 21 months does not startle me at all, for the snake in this instance I am sure never had a bite to eat during the time he was in the rat hole."

Fasting Serpents.

One hears occasionally of fasting serpents, but it is not often that the reptile enjoys the advantages possessed by a great Japanese python which has just paid its debt to nature in the Museum of Natural History in Paris. It arrived at the museum in the fullest health and strength on November 17, 1899. It was about eight feet long, of brilliant coloring, enormous diameter, and of singularly aggressive disposition. Its keepers soon found that it was a tectotaler of the most consistent character. Geese, ducks, sheep, hens—every conceivable dainty was offered, but in vain. It passed away on August 20, 1902, after a voluntary fast of two years nine months and three days.

BULLDOGS AS POINTERS.

Their Wide Noses and Habit of Eating Birds Against Them.

"Say, George, lend me your dog. I want to go out and get a bird or two for our supper. I want some kind of game food, and the only way you can get it in Colorado is to kill it yourself."

The one addressed as George, explains the Denver Post, was George C. Boniface, Jr. D. L. Don is the name of the would-be borrower. Boniface cast a withering look at the speaker, called the high-bred bull pup to him and they two ascended to the higher regions of the Adams.

"What in the name of common sense would you hunt with that bull dog?" was asked of Mr. Don.

"Birds," said Mr. Don.

"Game birds? No?"

"Yes, game birds," said Don, who is a sharp in matters pertaining to game and owns a string of 14 of the best blooded bird dogs in the country.

"Never heard of such a thing?" incredulously.

"Can't help it. Fact, though, I have hunted birds over a well-trained, full-blooded bulldog, and had good shooting, too. This dog was the property of a Syracuse gentleman, who began training her when she was a pup. She learned all the tricks readily, and was really far better than some bird dogs I have shot over. She ranged rapidly and widely, was well muscled, ambitious and untiring and could put up as many birds as the next. No, she did not lift her fore foot as you so often see a good Chesapeake do, neither did she keep her tail waving like a plume in the air. She had a stump tail, with nary a feather in it to wave.

"In coming to a point she was always right as to distance in point, but her nose was a little too wide for concentration and your birds sometimes get up so far to right or left as to make you do your work pert and lively. For a crack shot she was a bird of a dog. She had only one fault—would eat every blessed bird you downed; seemed to think she was entitled to the game, while you came in for the fun of shooting. I once killed 27 fat quail over her and got not even a bunch of feathers to take home."

A dead silence shut out the noise of the street cars.

AN INFANTILE TRAGEDY.

Little Girl's Twelve-Year-Old Uncle Temporarily Broke Her Heart.

There was another infantile tragedy up town a few days ago. The little girl whose heart was temporarily broken is four, with great round brown eyes. She owns as many dolls as she can count—a happy family of doll children of all kinds and sizes. She had tiny china dolls no bigger than her thumb and great waxen images almost as large as herself. She has dolls that walk, a doll that says "Pa-pa," a ballet doll, a Japanese maiden, a lady from gay old Paris.

In the midst of all these beautiful creations of the dollmaker's skill, says the Washington Star, there is one poor lonely creature, a rag doll, home-made, a pickaninny. And to this sad-faced, plainly arrayed dolly the tenderest affections of the little girl are attached. She clings to her "Dinah" and plays with her more perhaps than with all the others put together. She nurses "Dinah" through serious spells of illness, she mends her ragged clothes and attempts occasionally to wash her dirty face, which, however, only adds to the appearance of utter depravity which hangs about this poor old parcel.

The little girl has an uncle, a youngster of 12, maybe, and he was the unwitting cause of the dire disaster that befell his much beloved and tiny bit of a niece.

With tears streaming down her plump red cheeks, and a look of utter woe in her big, round eyes, the little girl came wailing to her mother the other day. "Dinah" was being pulled helplessly along by one of her arms. Something terrible had happened.

"What is it, little girl?" asked the mother in alarm. Then through the tears came the truth of the tragedy:

"O, mudder," she cried, "Charles called my beautiful Dinah a 'dirty thing.'"

PHASE IN ETHNOLOGY.

Mr. James Mooney Investigates Early Portuguese Settlements.

Mr. James Mooney, who has just returned from Indian territory, where he has been making a study of the Kiowa tribe for the bureau of ethnology, has also, during his career as an anthropologist, done considerable work in the way of investigating the Portuguese settlements along the Atlantic coast of the United States, a subject about which less is known than almost any other phase of the modern ethnology of America, says the Washington Post. All along the southern coast there are scattered, here and there, bands of curious people, whose appearance, color and hair seem to indicate a cross or mixture of the Indian, the white and the negro. Such, for example, are the Pamunks, of Virginia; the Croatan Indians, of the Carolinas; the Malungeons, of Tennessee, and numerous other peoples who, in the days of slavery, were regarded as free negroes, and were frequently hunted down and enslaved. Since the war they have tried hard, by act of legislation and otherwise, to establish their Indian ancestry.

Wherever these people are found, there also will the traveler or investigator passing through their region encounter the tradition of Portuguese blood or descent, and many have often wondered how these people came to have such a tradition, or in view of their ignorance, how they came to even know of the name of Portugal or the Portuguese. The explanation is, however, far simpler than one might imagine. In the first place, the Portuguese have always been a sea-going people, and, according to Mr. Mooney, who has looked up the subject, the early records of Virginia and the Carolinas contain notices of Portuguese ships having gone to wreck on the coasts of these states, and of the crews settling down and marrying in with the Indian mulattoes.

Moreover, there are records of Portuguese ships having sailed into Jamestown bay as early as 1665, and since then there has been more or less settlement of Portuguese fishermen and sailors from Maine to Florida. Now it has been the history of the Portuguese race that wherever they settled they mixed in with the darker peoples forming the aboriginal population of the countries occupied by the Portuguese settlers, and this is the reason and cause of the Portuguese admixture among the tribes along the coast of the United States.

In further proof of this he calls attention to the case of a colony of Portuguese fishermen who settled on the coast of Massachusetts a few years ago. These settlers have nothing whatever to do with the white or Yankee population around them, but are intermarrying and intermixing among and with the small remnant of the Narragansett Indians who have survived down to the present day. In short, it has been the history of the Portuguese that wherever they settled along the Atlantic coast they have intermixed and intermarried with the remnants of the Indian tribes that were once the sole proprietors of that region.

TORPEDO BOATS.

Compared with Battleships for Effectiveness as Fighting Machines.

Not many years since it was thought by some that it was better to build 50 torpedo boats costing $100,000 than one battleship costing $5,000,000. No doubt the torpedo boat, with her deadly torpedo (representing subaqueous ordnance), if she can lay out the game in advance, can get the better of the battleship. But the view is prevalent now that, while there should be some torpedo boats, the bulk of the money and effort put into naval and coast defenses should go into battleships and fortifications. The battleship can go anywhere, while the torpedo boat, because she cannot carry much coal, is tied to the home port, and in bad weather, when the battleship is comparatively steady, the torpedo boat would, at any speed, tear herself to pieces in the heavy seaway. In the same way, in land defense, the bulk of the money and effort is now put into permanent defenses and field artillery.—Engineering Magazine.

The Paradise of Roses.

The "paradise of roses" is not in Turkey, Bulgaria, or Persia, it seems, but at Sceaux, near Paris, where, in his garden of L'Hay, M. Graveraux has collected 6,000 different species from all parts of the world. The clambering roses are particularly fine, and are trained over espaliers as well as arcades.

Work on the 12-foot breast will be resumed at once and orders promptly filled.

THE INVALID'S BATH.

Every Nurse Should Know How to Make It So as Not to Disturb the Patient.

One of the most essential things in nursing is to learn how to change the bed clothes of a helpless patient, without uncovering or disturbing him or her unnecessarily. This is not easy, particularly if the sick person is stout and temporarily unconscious, or, for some special reason, as in operative cases, is not allowed to turn, or even move a limb. This, says the New York Tribune, is the time when a nurse shows her skill, patience and tact.

Without fuss, without bustle, without noise, she has everything in readiness—sheets, pillow cases, draw-sheet, etc., all aired and warmed. Then she places a protected hot-water bag at her patient's feet, for it must be remembered that, owing to their lowered vitality, the sick are extremely susceptible to cold and the least change of temperature, hence the absolute necessity of having the sheets thoroughly warmed before venturing to use them.

The pillow or pillows not in immediate use are first changed. The nurse gently and quietly passes her arm under the patient's head and shoulders, raising them only just enough to allow the easy withdrawal of the soiled pillow with the disengaged hand; then, with the same hand, she takes a clean pillow and slips it under the head, even as the other hand is slowly withdrawn, leaving both free to adjust the pillow to a nicety. Never shake or pat a pillow on the bed.

The bedclothes are then loosened at the head, side and feet on that side of the bed furthest from the patient; the upper clothing is now tucked well around him, and the soiled under sheet is pushed up close against his side.

The clean under sheet, which has previously been rolled (see diagram), is now laid on the mattress, the rolled side against the patient, and the loose side toward the nurse, who forthwith proceeds to tuck it well in at the head and sides. The rubber sheeting and draw sheet are treated in precisely the same manner, making in all three rolls, one against the other, next the soiled sheet by the patient's side.

Now, if the patient is not too weak or helpless, he can easily be moved over the "rolls" to the freshly made side of the bed, but if this is impossible, then some one on the opposite side has to give the nurse a little assistance in the following manner:

While the nurse with both hands presses down on the mattress—at the "arch," or "small," of the patient's back, where there is least pressure—she pushes the soiled sheet, bit by bit, from under him, while her assistant, in like manner draws it toward herself, being careful meanwhile to keep the patient well covered.

The same process is gone through with the "rolls" of clean sheets and the rubber, which are drawn out by the assistant, then tucked in smoothly and tightly on her side, according to former instructions.

The upper clothing is not difficult to change. The warm sheet and blanket are laid smoothly but loosely over the entire bed, and the nurse, having previously loosened the coverings round the patient, stands at the foot of the bed, and gradually draws them away from under the fresh clothing, while her assistant at the head of the bed holds the clean sheet and blanket in position and as close as possible to the patient. This over, nothing further remains to be done but to tuck in the sheet and blanket at the foot, and "tidy up" generally.

HOW TO ROLL BED COVERINGS.

ther remains to be done but to tuck in the sheet and blanket at the foot, and "tidy up" generally.

During the process of such a bed changing and making there are a great many little things to be observed.

If in the course of any ministrations a nurse sees that her patient is faint, tired or weak, she must at once desist, attend to the emergency, and watch and wait awhile. Her business is essentially to help the sick one recover his health, in face of which the making of a bed or the giving of a bath, etc., is a secondary consideration.

A person taking care of the sick must never be jerky, either in her manner, her speech or her actions. She must always be prompt herself, but she must never be guilty of hurrying her patient.

Good nursing may be defined as accurate knowledge intelligently employed through the medium of sound common sense.

Raisin Filling for Cake.

To make a raisin filling for cake cook slowly a mixture of seeded and chopped raisins, a cupful of water and two-thirds of a cupful of sugar. As soon as the raisins are tender stir in a slightly beaten egg, and cook over hot water until the sirup thickens. Add a flavoring of lemon, and cool before using.

TOO MUCH PET BEAR.

When Little Boy's Cute Cub Grew Up It Became Just a Trifle Too Affectionate.

There is a sort of indescribable fascination in the thought of having a real wild animal as a pet. A dog is well enough in his way, and so is a cat, or a pony, or a squirrel; but where is the boy that would not thrill clear down to his boots with the idea of having a pet bear, or a pet catamount? Well, such things have been, but it never turned out one-half so nice as it seemed at first.

Thereby hangs a little tale. A certain ardent sportsman, a friend of the writer, went to the Adirondacks last summer on a hunting excursion. While there he and his party killed an old she-bear and captured her cub, a little roly-poly of a beast about the size of a young Newfoundland puppy. Now, the sportsman had a boy at home, about four years old, whom he had promised that he would "bring him something" when he returned from his trip. So he concluded that this cub was just the thing. It was so young, and so very little, that he thought there would be not the slightest trouble in taming and training it.

Of course the boy was delighted with his pet, just as he would have been with a puppy, for he was too young to know or think anything about the "wild animal" part of it. It seems that the father took real pride in the fact that his boy had a sure enough live bear for a pet.

Everything went along very nicely for awhile. The boy and the cub had a mighty good time of it romping in the yard. In fact, the cub acted pretty much as a puppy would have done under the circumstances. But as the months passed the cub grew very fast, and it was not long until it was as big as two or three puppies, and it got to be pretty rough, too; not maliciously so, but in play, for it could not be expected to know just how far it might go in its romp with a boy.

One day when the boy and the bear were having an unusually good time on the lawn, and there was nobody in particular about, the family were alarmed by a series of shrill screams from the boy, and it was noticed, even in the excitement of the moment, that the screams were growing fainter and fainter.

It seems that the "hired-man" was the first to reach the scene, and he was just in time to rescue the boy from being hugged to death! Perhaps the bear did not know exactly what he was doing; he might even have thought that he was giving his little playmate a particularly strong evidence of his affection; but if nobody had heard the boy's screams there would certainly have been a funeral at that house, and the little fellow's epitaph might have been: "Died of Too Much Pet Bear." — St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

CANINE EQUESTRIAN.

Matt, a Pennsylvania Dog, Rides a Horse or Bicycle with Equal Skill and Grace.

One who is long in the town of Westchester, Pa., will become acquainted with Matt, a four-year-old cocker spaniel belonging to Mr. J. B. Fisher, because not to know Matt is to argue one's self unknown, not to mention the fact that Matt is a very desirable acquaintance to have.

His full name is Matt Quay, and he is as sharp in canine sagacity as is the other Matt in political sagacity. Matt knows all the ordinary tricks of dogs, and in addition he has accomplishments acquired and natural that are almost human. He loves boys and boys' sports, and there is nothing that he likes better than to mount a bicycle, with a small boy to do the work, and ride by the hour.

Another diversion of Matt is to mount a pony behind a boy, and, sitting astraddle, with his forefeet hugging the lad in the saddle, as any boy would do, stay on and ride as long as they will let him. In the winter it is his heart's delight to join the boys at coasting and take a "belly wopper" along with the rest of them. At this sport he never tires, and there is always a place for Matt on the boys' sled. He is willing to do his part drawing the sled back again, too, and his eyes sparkle and he shouts in his own way just as the boys do in theirs. — Detroit Free Press.

Carried Off by an Eagle.

An infant left asleep in its cradle in a field near Trieste in charge of an older child, while the mother went on with her work elsewhere, was carried off by an eagle. A search party discovered the eagle's nest, with the child's body already half devoured.

A NEW INDOOR GAME.

It is Highly Amusing and a Splendid Exercise or Acquiring Grace and Firmness.

Here is a game that may be indulged in safely, pleasantly and quickly, indoors or out. You will observe that the design for the butterfly follows the main characters of the pretty insect, without the details of antennae or feet—only what you see in the flight of the butterfly. The object of the game is to put the butterfly to flight and safely catch it, which might not happen if the form of the butterfly was followed exactly.

Cut the picture out and paste it on light cardboard, being careful to have both sides equal, so that it will balance evenly.

Place the butterfly on a book or light tablet, at right angles to the edge, and the tip of one wing extending a little beyond the edge. Incline the tablet slightly, and hold it up with your left hand, as high as you can reach comfortably. Then with a pencil or light stick in your left hand give a clean firm stroke to the tip of the wing, when the butterfly will soar. The object is to catch it on the tablet. If you succeed it counts ten to you, and your "go" next, and so on till it fails. If it falls to the ground on your side of a line agreed on it is still your "go," but counts only five. If it falls on the side of your opponent the "go" and count are his. One hundred is the limit of the game.

HOW THE BUTTERFLY IS MADE.

It takes considerable skill to catch the butterfly on the tablet, but it is worth the practice both in pleasure and profit, as it is an excellent exercise for acquiring grace and firmness. It requires the gentlest possible stroke to lift the butterfly, and alertness to catch or guide it where you wish it to alight.

When once you master the knack, it is fascinating and so gentle that a child in bed or crippled may play it. The gentleness necessary adapts it particularly to little shut-ins, while the activity permitted and the pretty sight tempts the players afield, where the butterfly world goes, if alive, and everyone may not follow.—People's Home Journal.

HOW RABBITS FIGHT.

Big Yellow Cat That Intended to Have a Great Feast Put to Ignominious Flight.

One day as I was quietly picking wild strawberries on a hill I heard a curious grunting down the side below me, then the quick thud! thud! of an angry rabbit. Among the bushes I caught a glimpse of rabbit ears. A fight was on.

Crouching beside a bluish spot, which I knew to be a rabbit's nest, was a big yellow cat. He had discovered the young ones, and was making mouths at the thought of how they would taste, when the mother's thump startled him. He squatted flat with ears back, tail swelling and hair standing up along his back, as the rabbit leaped over him. It was a glimpse of Molly's ears as she made the jump that I had caught. It was the beginning of the bout—only a feint by the rabbit, just to try the mettle of her antagonist.

The cat was scared, and before he got himself together, Molly, with a mighty bound, was in the air again; and as she flashed over him she fetched him a stunning whack on the head that knocked him endwise. He was on his feet in an instant, but just in time to receive a stunning blow on the ear that sent him sprawling several feet down the hill. The rabbit seemed constantly in the air. Back and forth, over and over the cat she flew, and with every bound landed a terrific kick with her powerful hind feet that was followed by a puff of yellow fur.

The cat could not stand up to this. Every particle of breath and fight was knocked out of him at about the third kick. The green light in his eyes was the light of terror. He got quickly to a bush and ran away, else I believe that the old rabbit would have beaten him to death.—From "Wild Life Near Home."

Three Cents Seemed Enough.

On the New Jersey side of the North river there is a parish of New York suburbanites who own a valuable church property. Upon their plot stands what is perhaps the smallest church building known to the denomination. One of the women members declared to the minister in charge that the building ought to have a slit in the roof, so that she might deposit her offerings in accordance with the traditions of childhood. A little girl, on her first visit to the service, received five pennies to put on the plate. When she returned her mother found that she still retained two of the five pennies. "Why did you not give it all?" the mother asked. "Oh, mamma," was the ingenious answer, "it was such a little church I thought three cents was enough for it!"

Pe-ru-na Creating a National Sensation in the Cure of Chronic Ailments of the Kidneys.

Major T. H. Mars, of the First Wisconsin Cavalry regiment, writes from 1425 Dunningstreet, Chicago, Ill., the following letter:

"For years I suffered with catarrh of the kidneys contracted in the army. Medicine did not help me any until a comrade who had been helped by Pe-ru-na advised me to try it. I bought some at once, and soon found blessed relief. I kept taking it four months, and am now well and strong and feel better than I have done for the past twenty years, thanks to Pe-ru-na."—T. H. Mars.

Mr. John Vance, of Hartford City, Ind., says: "My kidney trouble is much better. I have improved so much that everybody wants to know what medicine I am using. I recommend Pe-ru-na to everybody and some have commenced to use it. The folks all say that if Dr. Hartman's medicine cures me it must be great."—John Vance.

Mr. J. Brake, of Petrolea, Ontario, Canada, writes: "Four years ago I had a severe attack of Bright's disease, which brought me so low the doctor said nothing more could be done for me. I began to take Pe-ru-na and Manalin, and in three months I was a well man, and have continued so ever since."—J. Brake.

At the appearance of the first symptom of kidney trouble, Pe-ru-na should be taken. This remedy strikes at once the very root of the disease. It at once relieves the catarrhal kidneys of the stagnant blood, preventing the escape of serum from the blood. Pe-ru-na stimulates the kidneys to excrete from the blood the accumulated poisons, and thus prevents the convulsions which are sure to follow if the poisons are allowed to remain. It gives great vigor to the heart's action and digestive system, both of which are apt to fail rapidly in this disease. Pe-ru-na cures catarrh of the kidneys simply because it cures catarrh wherever located.

If you do not derive prompt and satisfactory results from the use of Pe-ru-na, write at once to Dr. Hartman, giving a full statement of your case and he will be pleased to give you his valuable advice gratis.

Address Dr. Hartman, President of The Hartman Sanitarium, Columbus, Ohio.

Have You Kidney or Bladder Trouble?

The Case of Mrs. Nancy Ball.

There are no diseases that more quickly and surely derange the entire constitution than Kidney or Bladder trouble, and it becomes every man and woman suffering from these diseases to have themselves cured at once. The body depends upon the kidneys to throw off the waste matter of the system, and when it fails to do this the result is an interference with digestion, a sudden stoppage of the free circulation of the blood and a serious weakening of the heart. Also rheumatism could not exist if it were not for weak and deranged kidneys.

Mrs. Nancy Ball, proprietor of the Ball House, Columbus, Miss., says: "I was for a long time a great sufferer from dropsy complicated with Kidney and Bladder trouble; my feet and hands were swollen and at times I was unable to walk about. My family physician had exhausted his skill in the treatment of my case without giving me any relief. I was then induced to give Smith's Sure Kidney Cure a trial and to my utter astonishment the first bottle relieved me, and I am in perfect health and able to stand to all my duties about the hotel. I consider Smith's Sure Kidney Cure the greatest medicine of the age."

MRS. NANCY BALL, Columbus, Miss.

SMITH'S SURE KIDNEY CURE contains nothing harmful, but nevertheless it will entirely cure Bright's disease, dropsy, gravel, stone in the bladder, blood in the urine, frequent desire to urinate, pain in the back, legs, sides and over the kidneys, swelling of the feet and ankles, retention of urine, stinging pain in the bladder, wetting the bed—in short, every form of Kidney, bladder and urinary trouble in man, woman or child.

BACKACHE.

Backache is a forerunner and one of the most common symptoms of kidney trouble and womb displacement.

READ MISS BOLLMAN'S EXPERIENCE.

"Some time ago I was in a very weak condition, my work made me nervous and my back ached frightfully all the time, and I had terrible headaches."

"My mother got a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for me, and it seemed to strengthen my back and help me at once, and I did not get so tired as before. I continued to take it, and it brought health and strength to me, and I want to thank you for the good it has done me."—Miss KATE BOLLMAN, 1432nd St. & Wales Ave., New York City. —$5000 for full original of above letter proving genuineness cannot be produced.

WATER HEATING DEVICE.

Where Hot Water Is Wanted in the Barn, This Clever Little Scheme Works Very Well.

The subjoined diagram illustrates how easily water can be warmed in a small way, where both house and barn are furnished with running water and moderate plumbing arrangements. The pipe marked e, running through the house cellar, furnishes water to the house and barn. By means of two short pipes, c, d, the pipe from the hot water boiler in the house is connected with the pipe, e, f, which as before stated supplies the barn with cold water.

Then all that is necessary to fill the barn tub with warm water is to open the valve b, and shut valve a, thus letting the warm water from the house boiler into the pipe which goes to the barn and shutting off the flow of cold. This clever little scheme has worked successfully on an up-to-date farm in Amherst, Mass., and has furnished warm water to four cows and two or three horses for several winters. The only objection is that the good housewife sometimes objects to having her supply of hot water exhausted two or three times a day.—Orange Judd Farmer.

TWISTED STOMACH WORM.

Parasite That Is Causing Considerable Trouble Among Lambs at the Present Time.

A press bulletin just issued by D. A. W. Biting, of the Purdue university experiment station, says that the past wet season has been very favorable to the development of animal parasites and the effects are now being realized in the very great loss of lambs due to twisted stomach worms. The symptoms are thirst, loss of appetite, increased thirst; diarrhoea may or may not be present; some show an accumulation of fluid between the jaws; grinding of teeth; stiffness of back and hind parts; lagging behind the flock. In acute cases there may be evidences of pain, as colic, eating unusual material and much bloating. Some die suddenly without showing much evidence of disease, but most linger a week or two. Old sheep are not much affected. The worm—one-half inch long and thread-like—is found in the fourth stomach. If a lamb is killed and the stomach be opened at once, these worms will be found of a pinkish color, but if the lamb dies and the stomach be not opened for a couple of hours, the worms will be white and matted together, resembling fibers of food.

The treatment is as follows: Take one part of coal tar creosote and 100 parts of water and mix well. With a two-ounce hard rubber syringe having a short bit of rubber tubing on the end, administer one syringeful to each lamb. Use care not to hold the head too high or to force the dose too rapidly, so as to cause strangulating. With such an arrangement a whole flock may be easily treated. One to three treatments given a few days apart may be necessary. It is also a good policy to turn the lambs off the regular pasture into the corn field. They will do little damage to the corn, and in eating the lower blades and grass get food free from all contamination. Yarding and giving dry feed may also be resorted to. The main object is to get the sheep off the infected pasture.

Feeding Carrots and Turnips.
 Carrots in reasonable amounts are excellent feed for milk cows and have no tendency whatever to dry them off. Frozen cabbage leaves are not fit food for cows or any other animals, but they will have no tendency to produce blindness. A great many people feed turnips and think them excellent for cows. They have a tendency to taint the milk, especially if fed just before or just at milking time. If fed immediately after milking time this tendency is reduced to a minimum. The fresh tops of turnips and beets make a very good relish for cows, but afford very little nutriment. They should be fed sparingly and after cows have partially appeased their appetites and not just before milking.

Keep All the Good Hens.

If one has noticed a particular hen during the season that seemed to excel the others in laying, one should not sell her because she is molting or has stopped work for awhile, but keep her for another year. One may not be able to breed as good pullets from her as she is herself, but leaving the value of her offspring out altogether, it is always safe to retain a hen that has shown herself profitable. Hens often last four or five years, and it is time to dispose of a good hen only when she is beginning to fail.

THE NEGLECTED HOG.

Many Otherwise Humane Farmers Visit the Humble Porker with Shameful Treatment.

Perhaps in the whole range of farm life no better—or worse—example of "let well enough alone" can be found than in the case of the poor, neglected pig. As we all know, this animal will live, and to a certain extent, thrive under the most adverse conditions. There are always a multitude of things to be looked after on a farm; some of them must be looked after thoroughly or they will be complete losses; others can be somewhat neglected and still counted on yielding a fair return. The hog, of all farm animals, of all farm work, is the most accommodating, the most patient of neglect, hence the hog is the most neglected. He may be put in a pen scarce large enough for him to turn about in, be made to plow his way in half his depth of mud and filth, be without shelter from the rain and without straw for bedding, and yet he will grow and add his full share to the farm products. As a pig—clean, keen and healthy—he is put into his narrow quarters, perhaps into four or five inches of oozy mud as left by his predecessor, and from that on to the time when he, too, is ready for the pork barrel there is but one thought regarding him—to feed him to his fullest capacity. The farmer is not so much to blame as might appear at first thought. He is very busy, the pig is very accommodating, the results in any case fairly sure. True, a few hours' work would mean a good pen, with sufficient shelter, and clean ground and straw for bedding; but there are fields to be made ready, seeds to be planted, crops to be looked after, all impatient of delay, so, as the pig grows and grunts on contentedly, he is passed over and the other things attended to. Now his pork may look all right, and sell for just as much as though he had been exposed to the influence of pure air and sunlight instead of being shut away from it by a perpetual incrustation of mud and filth; but enlightened customers are likely to have peculiar views of their own on the subject.—Frank Sweet, in Epitomist.

Ration for a Draft Horse.

According to the best authorities, the draft horse should have two pounds of food daily for each 100 pounds of live weight. A 1,600-pound draft animal should be fed 32 pounds of food, of which at least 10 to 18 pounds should be grain, the grain component depending on the severity of the labor performed. For light work, oats, with a little corn, are excellent; with an increase of work the amount of corn should increase, as this carbonaceous food supplies heat and force. Of late years cracked grain and hay run through a feed cutter is a favorite feed. This can be mixed and fed in the grain box. It is also the opinion of the best farmers that the noon meal should be comparatively light. Where horses are subjected to very severe labor, the grain should be ground and the hay moistened.

Make Use of Corn Cobs.

Burn them to charcoal in a pit and feed them to the pigs. Break the charred cobs into small pieces, add wood-ashes and common salt, and you have one of the best regulators for your hogs that can be invented. To eight bushels of the charcoal add 1½ bushels of wood ashes and eight pounds of salt. Mix well and sprinkle with a pound of copperas dissolved in a pail of hot water. Place in a box where the pigs can get free access to it, and you will be surprised at the appetite they seem to have for it. It will do them good, too.—Midland Farmer.

Feed for Working Horses.

It is quite essential to bear in mind the fact that a horse differs very much from a cow or steer in its digestive capacity when planning the feed. A horse needs a condensed ration; a cow or ox can handle one considerably more bulky. This is due to the fact that the horse has one stomach to handle all its feed while the ox has three stomachs that assist in preparing the food before it reaches the fourth or true stomach. A horse at heavy work is adapted to a good, heavy, grain ration, with hay.—Epitomist.

Michael Angelo Discharged.

One of the stories told by the genial and delightful Eugene Field was about the proprietor of a western theater, whose knowledge of art and literature was extremely limited. Inspecting the improvements at the beginning of a season, his attention was attracted by a new drop curtain.

Summoning the stage manager, he inquired: "What's that picture, anyhow?" "That," replied the stage manager, "is a scene after Michael Angelo."

"Well, Mike's no good," growled the proprietor. "Give him his salary and let him go."—Philadelphia Ledger.

THE NEED OF A STIMULANT.

The digestive organs, the liver, the kidneys and bowels lose their effectiveness at times and need help. At such a time a stimulating, cleansing and regulating medicine is of priceless value because serious diseases spring from neglected disorders in these organs. For this purpose there is no better medicine on earth than Prickly Ash Bitters, the great regulating system tonic, bowel and blood purifier.

The uniform success of this remedy in correcting disturbance in the system is due to its four-fold cleansing and strengthening effect. It is a kidney remedy of superior merit. It is a successful liver medicine. It tones up the digestive process in the stomach. It purifies and regulates the bowels. By removing obstructions and impurities in the blood, liver and bowels and strengthening the digestion, the whole internal organism is improved, and the weak, despondent victim feels at once a brightening up in body and brain, renewed energy, snap, vim and activity.

As a household remedy to relieve indigestion, sour stomach, heartburn, bad breath, belching, flatulence, constipation and for keeping the system in order it is invaluable.

SOLD AT DRUG STORES. PRICE $1.00.

Insist on having the genuine. No "just as good" article can point to as many years of successful battling with disease. When you buy Prickly Ash Bitters you get a remedy that does the work. Try it.

Total claims allowed since last report $11,081 23
I find that $296 of the above claims were made payable out of the county levy for 1901, and same have been paid by the Sheriff, which sum, deducted from the above leaves total claims unpaid this amount 10,785 23
To which add for two county bonds of $500 each 1000 00
Total $11,785 23

RESOURCES.
A conservative estimate for the county levy made for 1902 (which is now being collected) will net this amount $10,000 00
Balance due from 1901 levy, as shown by sheriff's settlement 1,008 89
Total $11,008 89
Which will leave a deficit of $726
